

Dear Library Directors and LIS Hiring Managers:

As a colleague actively involved in hiring within the library and information field, I wanted to introduce you to LibGig, (www.libgig.com), the hottest new resource on jobs, networking and career development for librarians and information people. Until October 1, 2008, Libgig is in beta as we continue to add new functions and enrich our content, and while we are all of our services are 100% free.

Our attached FACT SHEET gives you all the details, but to summarize the salient points:

- Our Market is your Market! We cater to information people: librarians, library science students, archivists, KM managers, directors, library technicians, systems analysts, and others. LibGig specializes in information workers at all levels.
- Our technologies for jobs and job postings not only exist on our increasingly heavily trafficked website, but are also automatically distributed by our RSS feed across the Internet universe to other job sites that may be visited by your applicants. The bottom line - you get maximum exposure and coverage by posting on LibGig.
- Our mission - to be THE go-to place for information professionals at all stages of their careers - is fast on the way, even in our young beta period, to becoming a reality - and that means ...eligible and qualified potential applicants, whether actively looking or passive candidates now employed, are going to see your job and apply.

We want you to try us out! In exchange for your participation we will post your job(s) for free, track the viewers and include your job in our "Who's Hiring" e-newsletter.

Please review the attached fact sheet, or review its contents at: Patty DeAnda and I are available to assist you in posting your FREE job listings and logos. To contact me, please call 914-419-7900, or email to raissa@libgig.com, or call Patty DeAnda, Communications Director, at 800-987-6794 or 323-302-9439 or email to pdeanda@libraryassociates.com.

Thank you for your participation – we know you will receive a great response when you post on LibGig!

With best regards,

Raissa Fomerand, M.L.S.
